Just or Unjust

But I say to you, Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, so that you may be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for he makes his sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the just and on the unjust.
Matthew 5:45

Just or Unjust

Relationships, we all have them. So what happens when your relationship turns toxic, the person who was once your friend is now your enemy? If we are to live the edict of "love your enemy" for God causes them to have the same benefits of life, "sun and rain," as you do, the "just." What do you do about the "unjust?" How do you love your enemy?

Just or Unjust

Victoria Kasunic, author of 12 Signs You're In A Toxic Relationship

Writes:

Sometimes it's hard to know whether you are in good, mutually supportive relationship with your partner, friends and family. If you're worried about what kind of relationship you're in, here are 12 telltale signs it could be toxic:

Just or Unjust

1. It's all about the other person — your needs, wants and desires don't rate.
2. You feel tired, drained or exhausted being around this person.
3. You're always in trouble or are "wrong."
4. You're afraid to express your opinions, thoughts or feelings.
5. The person mocks your looks, occupation, activities, mannerisms, family and friends.

Just or Unjust

6. You constantly feel unhappy or complain about the relationship to others.
7. You often play the parent or therapist role — even if it's for your parents!
8. You compromise yourself to maintain the relationship.
9. The person attempts to control aspects of your life like activities, finances, schedule, social outlets and friends.

Just or Unjust

10. You lack trust or you feel unsafe.
 11. The other person takes out his or her bad moods on you.
 12. Abuse of any kind is NEVER acceptable.
- So is your relationship or that of a loved one a just or unjust one? How does Jesus's edict on loving your enemies work in the situation?
